

Special Fall 2020 COVID-19 Issue of Mount Sinai Science & Medicine

October 27, 2020, Tuesday

Throughout our storied history, Mount Sinai has overcome obstacles that would have been insurmountable for other medical institutions. Because of our strength, talent, and resilience, we have continually emerged as a survivor, a leader, and a champion of innovative scientific research and compassionate patient care for the diverse communities we serve. This year, we rose to yet another formidable challenge in the form of the COVID-19 pandemic.

To allow us to reflect on that monumental effort, I am proud to announce that we have created a special fall 2020 COVID-19 issue of Mount Sinai Science and Medicine magazine. This issue describes the tremendous collaboration across our hospitals and our school during that tumultuous time. You can view the interactive digital version of the magazine, which includes links to video, here.

Because COVID-19 happened against the backdrop of the Black Lives Matter movement and protests against social injustice, you will also read about Mount Sinai's commitment to diversity and inclusion in the magazine.

This issue of our magazine represents a time capsule that allows us to reflect upon the remarkable contributions and the sacrifices of our entire Health System fighting COVID-19 earlier this year. I thank every one of you for your shared commitment to our institution.
